WORLD WAR II VETERANS DISCUSSION GROUP
HAGAMAN MEMORIAL LIBRARY 203-468-3890
227 MAIN ST. EAST HAVEN, CT 06512

January 2014

Our next meeting will be on Wednesday, January 29th at 2:00 pm in the Hagaman Library DeMayo Community Room.

This month, we have historian and long time amateur storyteller Arnie Pritchard who will share with us a treasure of hand-written letters from World War II. A few years ago Arnie inherited the Army footlocker of his Father, Tony Pritchard. The locker turned out to contain hundreds of letters and other documents from his father's service and from his two years working for the postwar U.N. displaced persons program.

The letters are vivid, thoughtful, and insightful. From a small selection of the letters Arnie has created a story focusing on his father's time in the front lines in Europe in 1944-45. The story portrays a young man encountering a world wider, more varied, and much more brutal than anything he had ever known. He had to cope with raw fear, with his role as a leader, and with doubts about himself and others. In writing home, he often struggled to convey his experiences to those who remained in the world he had lived in before Pearl Harbor. He struggled particularly with balancing his intense desire to have his parents understand what he was going through with his desire not to scare the daylights out of them.

The Nazis Had Plans to Invade Ireland

Early in World War II, German war chiefs were busy devising Unternehmen Grün or Operation Green: Nazi Germany's planned invasion of Ireland.

The plan would have seen the 4th and 7th infantry divisions of the German army being deployed to Ireland. The German 4th army corps in particular had a brutal reputation in battle, having inflicted many civilian casualties as they secured the Polish corridor to Warsaw during the invasion of Poland in 1939. Their advance, had the 4th and 7th been deployed to Ireland, would have been rapid—up to 60 miles a day, and their brutality would have been beyond doubt. A total of 50,000 German troops were allocated for the Irish invasion, initially to land on Ireland's southeast coast where they expected to be met with only token resistance, and then to aeri-ally bomb targets throughout the Irish Free State as it was then known. The Irish would have been completely unable to handle the onslaught from the invading German forces—the poorly equipped Irish army had only 7,600 regulars and 11,000 reserves and was incapable of mounting large-scale maneuvers. Many Irish army companies at the time travelled by bicycle! When Winston Churchill got wind of the German scheme, he drafted detailed plans for a counter-attack to be launched from Northern Ireland. In the end, Ireland's neutrality was respected and they emerged largely unscathed from the war, but had the invasion taken place, there could well have been large-scale casualties.

Hagaman Employee Has Ties to Vietnam War New Haven Airman

For 30 years, Hagaman Library Head of Circulation Darleen Hood (left) has worn this silver POW/MIA bracelet with the name of Air Force Col. Francis J. McGouldrick of New Haven on it to honor those who never came back from the Vietnam war. Darleen was shocked to see that the remains of Col. McGouldrick were finally found and buried at Arlington Cemetery on December 13th. "I got goosebumps when I heard about it," said Hood. She now wants to give the bracelet to his family. Col. McGouldrick was stationed in Vietnam in 1968 at the age of 39 and went missing in December of that year when his B-57E aircraft crashed on a mission over Laos.
